

Before you read note this: You know how amazon started with books, and became the giant it is? That's how I look at exprifi. I want to top ebay.

About you

1. Background: day job or full-time on Exprifi? How did you get into cards? Age range, family situation, financial runway — whatever a board should know.

Currently, I will be starting my first year as a full time teacher. Right now I am just teaching summer school, but the real school year is close. Our school hours are 8am-3:30 pm. I also would like some time to go to the gym but when I'm not working at school I come home to work on my card side hustle/business of flipping sports cards. Then when I finish those tasks and have time I turn my attention to Exprifi. Exprifi is my dream, but I often self sabotage and will go into deep holes on instagram "wanting" to work on exprifi, but just stuck in this spell of fear and anxiety. I need to get into a better schedule. I often am tired from work, and then book time for exprifi on the weekends, but forget I have travel plans since I go somewhere just about every weekend this summer. Hopefully that eases during the school year. Exprifi is my dream, I just get so stressed out about it's potential. I also worry a lot about the customer service aspect of it.

I got into cards after a surgery left me stuck on the couch in February, and have been hooked ever since. I'm 23, and like cards from vintage to current. Currently I'm single and not looking for anything, as I just want to build exprifi. Financially I'm pretty squeezed paycheck to paycheck now but that should start to get a little better when I start getting my real teachers salary. It's about 60k before tax and all the other things that get taken out so not too bad.

2. VoloksVault following: how big, and where does it live (IG, YouTube, Whatnot, eBay store, breaks)? Do you actively sell/break today?

The voloksvault following isn't where I want it to be. I got up to 100 followers and burnt out and stopped posting. I took 3 months off posting because I was moving and finishing college and didn't have the time. However, I didn't stop filming, and have 3 months of raw unedited footage on my phone. My goal is to edit and post all of it asap, and then bring it to claude so it can truly understand my lingo and how I do things. I'm okay with waiting for the growth for me to fully just put my content out there first, and then use Claude's ideas to grow after. The following is mainly instagram and tiktok. Although tiktok got randomly banned, which I am trying to get back and should win the case because I only post original PG rated content. I have about 900 Whatnot followers. I also took 3 months off Whatnot, but started back up again recently. I try to stream once a week on Tuesdays at 8pm. But I am starting to realize how challenging that is with all the competition. I am starting to wonder if I should try some 5am's and give that a whirl.

3. Your strengths and weaknesses as a founder — what should advisors push you on vs. trust you on?

Strengths is my desire, and my vision goes beyond most. I am a dreamer and a believer, and need to grow as an executor. I have hundreds of ideas each day that I write in my phone, but only 1% makes it to fruition. I am a selfless and caring person, but oftentimes can get taken advantage of, or my care for others makes me prioritize people over the time I really wanted to work on exprifi. It's a hard line for me to say no. But I want exprifi to be successful so badly. Like today I woke up in NYC, trained back to my place in CT, and then now I'm already back on a ferry back to Long island, just so I can drive all the way back up to JFK airport to pick my sister up. I wanted to spend all day today on exprifi, but now its all wasted on doing something nice for my sister.

Schedule

4. Walk me through a typical week: hours available for Exprifi, which days/blocks, fixed commitments (work, family), and when you do your best deep work.

I should be out of the house 8-4pm EST for work Monday-Friday. Obviously I get a lot of days off being a teacher too. Like I said before, I often come home and only work on my card business with voloksvault, or exprifi once those tasks are done. I also flip things whenever I find the time because I need extra money. I want to have fixed time each day for exprifi, but I need some consistent scheduling and motivation or just a place where I can do work that isn't my bed because I always fall asleep and take a nap. I'm single and not looking for anything serious. Sometimes I go out on the weekends but not often. I also travel a lot on weekends this summer but hoping that dies down soon.

5. How much time goes to building vs. content/audience vs. selling cards today? Is that the split you want?

I spend like a n hour editing one 10-30 second video. I wish I didn't. Selling cards depends, but its about at least 2 hours daily. That includes packing orders, listing cards, sleeving , sorting, all of that. I film most of it which also slows me down at times. I have so much footage that needs to be edited. But mst of my time goes into the cards that I fail to make real time for exprifi.

True goals & vision

6. What does Exprifi really need to become for you — lifestyle business, full-time income replacement, venture-scale company, acquisition target? What annual income or exit number = "this worked"?

I think my dream for exprifi is to become one of the next great companies. In full transparency my end goal is for it to be come an acquisition target and be sold to a larger company. However, in the short term, I want to live the life as a CEO, I want to build my company to the best, I want to life it out, and then when the time is right to settle down I will sell it. I'm not in any rush to do some quick flip, I don't think quick money exists. My flow is almost pretty aligned with what happened with Dave Portnoy and Barstool. Build up the company, put everything into it, and when its time to sell, sell.

7. 12-month picture: what does success look like by July 2027 (users, GMV, revenue, your role)?

Success in 2027 looks like a company that makes money, and maybe even has real employees or partners. I honestly can't imagine that I can always do every little task at the scale that I truly believe exprifi can be. You know how amazon started with books, and became the giant it is? That's how I look at exprifi. I want to top ebay. I don't know that much about the numbers side of things but I know what the heart soul and goal of exprifi is. Would love someone else expertise and guidance with the money side of it all.

8. 5-year picture: if everything works, what is Exprifi and what's your life like?

If everything works then exprifi is doing so well that ebay brings their version of reverse marketplace back. My life will be good, I will have accomplished my goal of giving all my boys from home a sizable gift and paid off their college. And if I am not at that point then I should be continually lining it up so that I am within the next 3 years maximum. If not by that point then large scale personal evaluation. Life is balanced with good doses of stress and relaxation. Maybe I have time to work in a school even if its part time again. The business would be running itself and the right employees would be put in place to do so. Maybe I'd invest times into other projects and so on. Maybe have started Top5 (another idea I have)

9. What would make you quit or pivot? What's the failure condition and the deadline you're giving this?

The hardest decision I anticipate is when I have to decide if exprifi is at the point that I need to be going all in and make the decision to leave my teaching job. Exprifi should be able to grow without effecting my teaching career, if it does it has to be because exprifi has exploded. That will be a hard decision to leave teaching as I love being in the school system.

10. Would you take outside money (investors), or bootstrap only?

I'd take outside money.

Sharpening the eBay wedge (for company-overview.md)

11. In your own words, the #1 reason a buyer uses Exprifi over eBay, and the #1 reason a seller does. (I have the reverse-marketplace thesis — I want your phrasing of the wedge.)

The number one reason a buyer uses exprifi over ebay is because they can almost 100% ensure that their desire is fulfilled at their desired price. So many cards on ebay are listed way above comp, and sometimes a $20 card is only listed for $40+ because there is such little stock. ON exprifi you skip the fluff and save the time searching. Deals come to you with images and you can quickly pay. You are so happy you get what you want without the extra time searching that you pay a 5% convenience fee per transaction.

The seller loves exprifi because at any moment a card that they want to move could pop up on the want board at any moment. At any time they can race to move that card they wanted, having a global audience rather than their local area. Oh and did I mention they wouldn't pay any fees? Shipping the buyer and seller would have to work out, but they get to keep 100% of the profit. Thus driving the competition to always fulfill orders, which keeps buyers happy.

12. Rank your differentiators: demand-side model, lower fees, trust/fraud story, niche vertical focus, AI-native features. Which do you lead with publicly?

Definitely demand-side model. All the other identities feel oversaturated within the current market.

Positioning & personas

13. Describe 3–5 real people (anonymized) from your following who are your ideal first users — what they buy/sell, budgets, what frustrates them today.

This buyer is in search of the 86 Fleer Jordan card, or cards of that set. Those buyers are always looking, and constantly upcharged because the demand is so high. Here they can name their price and boom they actually get it.

The person is a seller who desperate to move dead/stagnant inventory. It feels like nobody wants this one thing and then boom I'm directly connected with a buyer who wants it. May even be able to sell at a premium.

Buyers and sellers happy to lock in their price efficiently.

This person is largely looking for higher end singles,

This person is a whatnot/livestream seller looking for large volume of inventory. They sell all types of sports cards. And one day will sell Disney and TCG cards because exprifi will have grown :)

Seller doesn't lose out on fees, the buyer happily pays the 5% convenience fee.

14. Any competitors you worry about beyond eBay/COMC/MySlabs — e.g., Whatnot, Fanatics ecosystem, Facebook groups? Who's the real enemy?

Facebook groups could be our biggest enemy or our biggest supporters. I plan on using many of them to hype up the release of the app. The enemy is like eBay, which is why hopefully they just buy us. Fanatics has a strong network of supporters, and I feel they may view us as a threat, rather than taking them under their wings. Interesting thing to monitor. My view with whatnot is that we are literally perfect for them, we are the feeder of bulk lots to whatnot streamers. We give them access to make the markups and consistently have products.

Brand

15. Where did the name "Exprifi" come from, and what should it evoke?

After a long battle trying to find a combination of letters for a domain ending in ".com". Exprifi stands for our vision of "Express Fulfillment" . Express is you put out what you want, prifi is the physical act of fulfilling their order (as the seller).

16. Do you have a tagline you like beyond "demand becomes the listing"? Voice: more hype/collector-energy or clean/trustworthy?

The demand exchange- post what you want, sellers come to you.

Post a need. Watch sellers race to fill it.

Browse open needs Be first to strike the deal.

The marketplace that hunts for you.

Open demand.

Metrics & ops

17. Any hard numbers you've committed to for the M1 liquidity test (target % needs with offers, time-to-first-offer, # of seeded users at launch Aug 8)?

Nope, I also just haven't fully wrapped my head around the liquidity test. But I just am struggling to see why that is a good move. Popularizing it to 1000+ people means that thousands more at least heard of it and moved on. So they at least know of it. That gives ebay and their extensive team time to redevelop their app and that screwed us. We would lose everything.

18. Budget: what are you willing to spend monthly on infra/tools/ads right now?

I bought Higgsfield for a year so was hoping to use all those credits for each month, I believe its been added on as a connector since I signed up. I would allow for budgeted adds monthly after the new higgsfield images and videos were generated. Maybe $200 monthly> whatever is necessary and proportional for success.

Glossary

19. Any hobby or internal slang you use constantly that I should look definitions for (beyond need, offer, match, lane 1/2, breaker, bulk, filter request)?”

Counter, wax, slabs, sgc, psa, beckett, sleeved (card put in penny sleeve), toploaded (sleeved card put in toploader hard plastic),

Drop the doc in the folder or paste it here when ready, and I'll build all 12 Board-Reference files.
